

Dedication

"Carlos Blacker (1859-1928) was an Englishman of independent means who lived mostly abroad, especially in Paris, where he took a passionate interest in the Dreyfus case. He was an excellent talker, friend, correspondent and linguist, learning a new language every two years. In his old age he learned Hebrew, so that if he went to Heaven he could talk to God in His own language. A letter from Blacker to Wilde, dated 16 January 1893 (MS. Clark), suggests that Blacker had some financial interest in the original production of Lady Windermere's Fan." (Hart-Davis, Letters 540 n. 2)
